Silence Is Golden

By FRED AYERS

In this era of instant communication, where news reaches us in seconds via smartphones and social media, there's a paradox: The louder we try to be heard, the quieter we sound. Our words, written or spoken, often fail to convey the depth of our feelings or the complexity of our thoughts. Instead, they may come across as hurried, superficial, or insincere. Silence, on the other hand, has the power to speak volumes. It invites reflection, it conveys respect, and it can provide a space for deeper understanding and connection. Silence is not a lack of communication, but a choice to communicate differently.
