Nation's High Unemployment Rate 'Made In Washington'

 Jobless Increase To 9.2 Percent

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Business depressed by recession and a continuing labor surplus have contributed to a 9.2 percent unemployment rate in the nation, the highest since the Great Depression, President Johnson announced today.

In a message to Congress, the President said the nation's jobless rate is 9.2 percent, up from 8.8 percent last month. He said the rate is the highest since the Great Depression, when it reached 25 percent.

"We are facing a serious economic crisis," the President said in the message. "We are losing jobs, wages are falling, and the economy is in a serious downturn.

The President argued that his policies, while slowing the economy, have not been the cause of the joblessness. He said the Federal Reserve's efforts to control inflation have contributed to the problem.

"The Federal Reserve's efforts to control inflation have contributed to the problem," the President said. "But there is no denying the fact that we are losing jobs, wages are falling, and the economy is in a serious downturn.

The President also said the recession has been caused by the war in Vietnam, which has drained resources and led to higher taxes.

"The war in Vietnam has drained resources and led to higher taxes," the President said. "But there is no denying the fact that we are losing jobs, wages are falling, and the economy is in a serious downturn.

The President urged Congress to take action to stimulate the economy, including increased government spending and lower taxes.

"I urge Congress to take action to stimulate the economy," the President said. "Increased government spending and lower taxes are essential to get the economy moving again.

The President also called for a reduction in the budget deficit, which he said is contributing to the recession.

"The budget deficit is too high," the President said. "It is time for us to take steps to reduce the deficit and get the economy back on track.

The President ended his message by asking for the nation's assistance in overcoming the economic crisis.

"I urge all Americans to join together to overcome this economic crisis," the President said. "We can do this if we work together and keep working hard.

The President signed the message to Congress today, and it will be read into the record of the House of Representatives.
