Mobster CIA Link Shooked FBI

The Washington Post Washington, D.C., 2021. In a setback for a New York City mobster who was later convicted and sentenced to life in prison, the Justice Department has informed a federal judge that it will be dismissing an indictment against him. The 56-year-old man, identified as John Gotti Jr., was charged in 2016 with racketeering and other crimes related to his involvement in the Gambino crime family. He had been arrested in 2014 following a three-year investigation by the FBI and the New York Police Department. The indictment alleged that Gotti Jr. was involved in a variety of criminal activities, including extortion, gambling, and murder. The decision to dismiss the case comes after the Justice Department determined that the evidence against Gotti Jr. was not strong enough to support a conviction. Gotti Jr. had pleaded not guilty to the charges and was awaiting trial when the indictment was dismissed. The Justice Department has not commented on the specific reasons for dismissing the case, but it is believed that the decision was influenced by the ongoing investigation into theactivities of the Gambino crime family. The Gambino family is one of the five families that control organized crime in New York City. The other families are the Bonanno, Colombo, Lucchese, and Genovese families. The Justice Department has been investigating the Gambino family for decades, and has made several high-profile arrests and convictions of members of the family in recent years. The decision to dismiss the Gotti Jr. indictment is likely to be seen as a setback for the Justice Department's efforts to bring down the Gambino family and other organized crime groups in New York City.

Refugee Effort Called ‘Sloppy’

By Washington Post

The Washington Post, New Service

Washington – A refugee agency in the District of Columbia is increasingly being criticized for its policies toward Americans who are affected by the war in Vietnam.

The agency, which has been called the “mushroom” group, is also under increasing scrutiny for its policies toward Vietnam veterans and former servicemen and women who are affected by the war.

SLA Jury Still Split

A preliminary hearing in the court-martial of two members of the anti-Vietnam movement was held in Washington last week.

The hearing was to determine whether the jury is prejudiced against the defendants, who are facing charges of conspiracy to commit a crime.

The jury was not allowed to hear evidence about the charges, but the judge ruled that the evidence was admissible.
