FBI Failure In Dealing With Political Terrorism

Frustration Of Hearst Case Haunts Law Enforcement

In Los Angeles, the FBI and the Los Angeles Police Department are battling over the investigation of the murder of Patrice Hearst. The FBI says it has the evidence to solve the case, but the LAPD is insisting on doing it its own way. The result is a bitter feud between two agencies that are supposed to be working together.

The FBI has been investigating the murder of Patrice Hearst since 1980. The case has been the subject of numerous television shows and movies, and has become a symbol of the struggle between law enforcement and radical political groups.

The LAPD, on the other hand, has been investigating the murder of Patrice Hearst since 1981. The LAPD has been criticized for its handling of the case, and has been accused of covering up evidence of police brutality.

The feud between the FBI and the LAPD has only worsened in recent years. The FBI has accused the LAPD of withholding evidence, while the LAPD has accused the FBI of interfering in its investigation.

The feud has led to a number of lawsuits, including a lawsuit filed by the family of Patrice Hearst against the LAPD. The lawsuit alleges that the LAPD used excessive force during the investigation of the murder.

The feud has also led to a number of protests and demonstrations. In recent years, there have been protests against the LAPD's handling of the case, and against the FBI's interference in the LAPD's investigation.

The FBI and the LAPD are currently working together to solve the murder of Patrice Hearst. However, the feud between the two agencies has created a number of obstacles, and it remains to be seen whether they will be able to work together effectively.
