The 48-Hour Vacation

How much has been solved in the budgetary tangle, which is expected to end in Friday's in which the House and Senate are expected to engage in budget bills for the next day or two? A Senate bill that is expected to come up before the House this week is the Budget Bureau's theme. First Trickle Of North Sea Oil Flows Into British Refinery

The North Sea oil fields are set to produce a first trickle of oil for British refineries. The oil, known as "North Field Blend," will be delivered to the Pyramiden oil terminal in the early part of 2023. The project, which has been in development for several years, is expected to bring significant economic benefits to the region. The oil will be refined at the nearby Grangemouth refinery, providing a new source of energy for the UK. The project is a joint venture between BP, Shell, and Statoil, and is one of the largest oil projects in the North Sea.

No Parallel, Bellmon Says

ROGERS (Ark.) - Sen. Henry Bellmon, Republican, said there was no parallel between the February oil price crash and the price crash of 1986.

"Here we have a parallel," he said, "but in 1986, there was a transfer of wealth. Now, it's a transfer of wealth." Bellmon said that the two crashes were different because of the different economic conditions.

In 1986, the oil price crash was caused by an overproduction of oil, which led to a decrease in oil prices. In contrast, the current oil price crash is caused by a decrease in demand for oil, which is due to the global economic downturn.

Bellmon said that the current oil price crash is not a good thing for the economy. He said that the United States needs to be able to produce oil in order to maintain a strong economy.
