Stars Salute America

By NANCY GILSON

All right, Austin! Stars and stripes and flag waving, the seventh annual Stars Salute America celebrated Bob Hope's 70th birthday and last one before the Mite. The biggest item of the evening, and the most important, was the person addressed the parade show with which the entire audience was thrilled. The star attraction was Bob Hope, who received a special two-hour program.

Bandleader conductor Jack Ridley led the show in a medley of patriotic songs, followed by comedians Barrie and Dobbs, who entertained the audience with their usual charm and humor.

The highlight of the evening was the presentation of the Bob Hope Award to a special guest, who was introduced to the audience by one of his closest friends, Bob Hope himself.

Another Oil Crisis Ahead

The Middle East oil embargo has resulted in a situation that may lead to a serious economic problem in the United States. The United States is heavily dependent on oil imports, and the embargo has had a significant impact on the price and availability of fuel.

The embargo has resulted in higher prices for gasoline and other fossil fuels, which in turn has led to higher costs for transportation and other industries. The embargo has also had a negative impact on the economy, as it has reduced the availability of energy and increased the cost of goods and services.

The embargo has also highlighted the vulnerability of the United States to energy shocks. The United States has limited domestic energy supplies and relies heavily on imports for its energy needs. The embargo has shown that the United States is not immune to the effects of energy shocks, and it has called into question the country's energy policy.

The embargo has also had political implications. The embargo has been used as a tool to pressure the governments of oil-producing countries to make changes in their policies. The embargo has also been used as a means of punishment for countries that are perceived to be acting in ways that are contrary to the interests of the United States.

The embargo has also raised questions about the role of the United States in global energy markets. The embargo has shown that the United States is not immune to the effects of energy shocks, and it has called into question the country's energy policy.

The embargo has also highlighted the need for the United States to diversify its energy sources. The United States should consider increasing its use of renewable energy sources, such as wind and solar power, and reducing its dependence on fossil fuels.

The embargo has also highlighted the importance of international cooperation in energy markets. The United States should work with other countries to ensure that energy markets are stable and fair.

The embargo has also highlighted the need for the United States to have a coherent energy policy. The United States should have a clear strategy for managing its energy needs, including both domestic and imported energy sources.

The embargo has also highlighted the need for the United States to have a strong economy. The United States should focus on developing its economy and reducing its dependence on foreign energy sources.

The embargo has also highlighted the need for the United States to have a strong military. The United States should have a strong military to protect its interests in the Middle East and to defend itself against potential threats.

The embargo has also highlighted the need for the United States to have a strong government. The United States should have a strong government to make decisions that are in the best interests of the country.

The embargo has also highlighted the need for the United States to have a strong public. The United States should have a strong public that is informed and engaged in the country's energy policy.
