Governor: It's Mandate

By JOHN GILLER

Governor David Boren has said the Oklahoma legislature is in session to fulfill the promises of his 1974 campaign.

"This is the first hour of every legislative day," Boren said Thursday. "We have to keep it up to the standards of our campaign."

The governor told the legislature he wants a new highway to Denver and a new courthouse for Oklahoma City. Boren also wants the legislature to consider programs for education, health, housing and welfare.

"I believe it's our obligation to provide a new highway to Denver," Boren said. "It's the only way we can get to the professional people who live in Denver and other states to help us solve our problems."

Boren said the legislature should also consider programs for education, health, housing and welfare.

"If we don't do something about education, we'll never get anywhere," Boren said. "We need to provide better schools and more money for education."
