Hammons Says Derryberry Ruling Shows 'Deficiencies In Merit System'

Hammom says although "unfairness" in the civil service department has been found, the fault lies elsewhere:

"It is not a question of the system being unfair. The problem lies in the administration of the system."

Hammons said the state's merit system laws are "too complex" and "too rigid" to be effective.

"The system is not working as it should," he said. "It is not providing the best people for the job."
