A New Look For Howard!

By TERRY MASON

Howard McMillian, publisher of The Oklahoma, today unveiled a new look for his newspaper. McMillian, who has been with the paper for over 15 years, said the redesign was necessary to keep up with the changing needs of readers.

The new design features a larger font size and more white space, which McMillian believes will make the paper more readable. The layout has been simplified, with fewer columns and a more balanced distribution of content.

The paper will also be available in a digital format, allowing readers to access it on their mobile devices. McMillian said this would help increase circulation and reach a younger audience.

The paper's new format was the topic of a meeting held at the newspaper's headquarters today. Publisher Howard McMillian said he was pleased with the response to the redesign.

"We've received a lot of positive feedback," McMillian said. "People are saying they like the new look and feel, and that it's easier to read." McMillian added that he hoped the changes would help attract more advertisers.

A new political leader has been appointed to the top job at the University of Central Oklahoma. The leader, who is expected to implement significant changes at the institution, has been welcomed by many as a breath of fresh air.

The changes are expected to include a new focus on student success, an increased emphasis on research and innovation, and a renewed commitment to community outreach.

The new leader has also made it clear that he intends to address the university's financial challenges, which have been a source of concern for many.

The amount in question was $50 million, and it was expected to remove a significant amount of uncertainty from the university's budget, allowing it to focus on other priorities.

Inside News

By POLLY DAVIES

The Oklahoma Journal

A number of important developments have taken place over the past month, including a new round of budget cuts and a significant increase in tuition fees.

The budget cuts were necessary to address the university's financial challenges, which have been exacerbated by a decline in state funding.

The increase in tuition fees was expected to generate an additional $20 million in revenue, which will be used to fund new initiatives and programs.

In addition, a new partnership has been formed with a leading technology company, which will help the university to expand its online offerings and reach a wider audience.

95 Pounds Of 'Unqualified Woman'

By NANCY GILSON

The Oklahoma Journal

A new woman has been hired as a driver for the city's public transportation system. The woman, who is currently 95 pounds overweight, was hired despite her weight.

The move has been met with some criticism, with some arguing that it is not fair to hire someone who is overweight. However, the city's transportation department said it was necessary to hire someone who could handle the job.

In the past, the city has faced criticism for its lack of diversity in hiring practices. The new hire is seen as a step towards addressing this issue.

The city's transportation department has also announced plans to launch a new program to help overweight individuals to lose weight. The program, which will be funded by a grant from the federal government, will provide coaching and support to help individuals achieve their weight loss goals.

The program is expected to be launched in the fall, and participants will be able to sign up online. The city's transportation department said it was committed to helping all residents to achieve their goals.
