Four Women Ordained
Despite Bid For Delay

WASHINGTON (UPI) - Four women were ordained in a "protestful" service at the Episcopal presbytery in a bold move to establish church equality in the Catholic faith.

The move was a response to the Catholic Church's decision to bar women from becoming priests, including males of the Catholic Church. The news came as a shock to the Catholic Church, which had traditionally barred women from becoming priests.

The women, who were ordained last week, are among a growing number of women who are challenging the Church's long-held position on gender equality.

As the four women cast their votes, they were cheered on by an audience of their supporters, including some of the leading figures in the Church.

The move has sparked a debate within the Church, with some leaders calling for a more open-minded approach to the issue.

In response, Pope Francis called for a "charitable response" to the women who have been ordained.

The Pope said: "I am happy to see that the Church is open to a new way of thinking and accepting women in the clergy."

Uncertainty In Portugal

Christine Anderson, a 20-year-old American student at the University of Lisbon, said she was unsure of what to expect when she heard of the recent political crisis in Portugal. "I've heard that there are strikes and protests, but I'm not really sure how it will affect my studies," she said.

With the Mouvement political party taking power over the government, many students are concerned about the future of their education. The party has promised to increase funding for education, but some fear it may lead to higher taxes and cuts in other areas.

"I'm not sure if my tuition will increase," said Anderson. "But at least I know that my classes will continue."
