Study Says Arkansas Has Half Of Faulty U.S. Bridges

WASHINGTON, D.C. (AP) - A new study by the U.S. Bureau of Public Roads has found that Arkansas has half of the nation's bridges that are considered structurally deficient. The study, released today, indicates that 34% of the state's bridges are in need of repair or replacement. The report was based on an analysis of bridge data from the Federal Highway Administration, which tracks the condition of U.S. roads and bridges.

Bureaucrat Tells How Gobbledygook Written

WASHINGTON, D.C. (AP) - A top official with the Federal Highway Administration explained today how the agency's reports are written in gobbledygook, a term that describes language that is difficult to understand. "We use a lot of legal jargon and technical terms," said the official, who asked not to be named. "It's all designed to confuse the public and make it harder for them to hold us accountable." The official said the agency is working on simplifying its reports to make them more accessible to the public.

Unions Gain Influence

WASHINGTON, D.C. (AP) - Labor unions are gaining more influence in the federal government, a trend that is reflected in recent appointments to high-level positions. "Labor unions are no longer seen as an enemy of the state," said a labor official. "They are now seen as partners in the development of policies that benefit workers." The official said the trend is likely to continue as more unions take an active role in the political process.
