Congress Denied 'Sting' Evidence

WASHINGTON (UPI) - The Justice Department will ask Senate and Senate ethics committees to conduct a "sting" that implicated several senators of Congress in a bribery-for-favors scheme if it concludes it should be investigated, sources said Tuesday.

The source and Assistant Attorney General Philip Boyden, chief of the criminal division, will tell the Senate Ethics Committee Wednesday morning that the department plans to withhold its evidence from the press.

One informed source said the Senate will ask the other committees to conduct a "sting" that implicated several senators of Congress in a bribery-for-favors scheme if it concludes it should be investigated, sources said Tuesday.

The source and Assistant Attorney General Philip Boyden, chief of the criminal division, will tell the Senate Ethics Committee Wednesday morning that the department plans to withhold its evidence from the press.

Special Prosecutor Vetoes In Miller Payoff Probe

WASHINGTON (UPI) — All indications point to House Special Prosecutor Victor Mitchell's decision Tuesday to drop his probe of a possible payoff to former President Richard Nixon's Secretary of Treasury John D. Mitchell, who has been charged with or faced with conflicts of interest.

The decision came after Mitchell announced Tuesday that he had reached an agreement with Nixon's Secretary of Treasury John D. Mitchell, who has been charged with or faced with conflicts of interest.

U.S. Officials, Businessmen Helped Afghan Invasion

WASHINGTON — Any suggestion that America is in the midst of a major war against terrorism is belied by a new report that U.S. officials and businessmen have been working closely with the Taliban, the government of Afghanistan's new rulers, to help them combat the military threat posed by al Qaeda.

The report, which was obtained by The Journal and has been confirmed by several independent sources, suggests that the United States has been covertly providing assistance to the Taliban in their efforts to defeat al Qaeda. The assistance includes the provision of military equipment, training, and intelligence information.

The report alleges that U.S. officials have been assisting the Taliban in building a network of spies and intelligence gatherers within al Qaeda, and that they have been providing the Taliban with information on the location and movements of al Qaeda leaders.

The report also claims that U.S. officials have been working with the Taliban to develop a strategy for engaging al Qaeda in a military conflict, and that they have been providing the Taliban with weapons and supplies to carry out their military operations.

The report has sparked a furor in the United States, with some calling for the immediate end of all assistance to the Taliban.

In response, the U.S. government has denied the allegations, stating that they are "completely unfounded" and "false." The government has also denied that it is working with the Taliban in any way.

However, the report has raised concerns among some lawmakers and national security experts, who fear that the United States may be compromising its own security interests in its pursuit of al Qaeda.

Mouled Murder' Update

Bob Greene

The notoriety of the case as it draws to a close is not the only explanation for the recent flurry of media interest in the trial of the teenager accused of murdering his family. The recent interest in the case is also due to the fact that the teenager's trial is scheduled to start in a few weeks, and the media is eager to cover the trial.

The teenager is accused of murdering his parents, his younger brother, and his sister. The teenager had been living with his parents and his sister in a small town in the Midwest, where he had been known to be a troubled youth. The teenager had been arrested in connection with the murder of his parents and his sister, and had been sentenced to life in prison.

The teenager's trial is scheduled to start in a few weeks, and the media is eager to cover the trial. The teenager's trial is expected to be a highly publicized event, with many people attending the trial to watch the proceedings.

Churches Tackle Energy Crisis

Washington (AP) - The energy crisis was on the minds of religious groups in Washington, D.C., last week, as they met to discuss ways to address the problem.

The meeting was organized by the National Council of Churches, which has been active in addressing the energy crisis for several years. The council has been working with government agencies, religious organizations, and other groups to develop strategies to address the energy crisis.

Church leaders said they were concerned about the impact of the energy crisis on their communities and on their faith communities. They said they were also concerned about the impact of the energy crisis on the environment and on the economy.

Embargoed Corn To Fuel Plants?

Washingon (AP) - Embargoed corn to fuel plants?

The Department of Agriculture has announced that it will beembargoing corn to fuel plants in an effort to address the energy crisis. The embargo will begin in the fall of the year and will last for one year.

The embargo is expected to have a significant impact on the corn market, as corn is the primary crop grown in the United States. The embargo is expected to make corn more expensive, and it is likely that the embargo will have a ripple effect on other crops as well.

Disabling Injury Haunts Workers

Sylvia Porter

In the past few years, the number of disabling injuries has increased in the United States. These injuries can occur in any workplace, and they can result in a variety of outcomes, including permanent disability and death.

Disabling injuries can occur in a variety of ways. They can be caused by accidents, such as falls, collisions, or explosions, or they can be caused by exposure to hazardous substances, such as chemicals or radiation.

Disabling injuries can have a significant impact on workers and their families. They can result in a loss of income, medical expenses, and emotional stress. They can also result in the need for long-term care, such as home health care or nursing home care.

In response to the increasing number of disabling injuries, the federal government has taken steps to address the problem. These steps include the development of workplace safety standards, the enforcement of these standards, and the provision of resources to help workers who have been injured on the job.

As the government continues to work on these issues, it is important that workers and their families are aware of the risks associated with disabling injuries and that they take steps to protect themselves from these injuries.
