Hostage Freedom Close, Carter Says

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Carter said Tuesday night that negotiations between hostage negotiators and the Iranian government were "progressing" and that he hoped the negotiations would lead to the release of the hostages in Tehran by the weekend.

"I believe that the case is progressing," Carter said in a statement to the nation. "I expect that the negotiations will continue and that we will make progress." Carter added that he hoped the negotiations would lead to the release of the hostages by the weekend.

The statement came after the Iranian government announced that it had received a letter from Carter asking for the release of the hostages.

"We have received a letter from President Carter," Iranian Foreign Minister Ali Akbar Velayati said in a statement. "We are studying the letter and will respond in the near future." Velayati added that the Iranian government was committed to the release of the hostages and was ready to take all necessary steps to ensure their safe return.

The Iranians have consistently refused to negotiate with the United States over the hostage crisis, which began in November 1979 after a group of militant students seized the U.S. Embassy in Tehran. The students demanded the release of hundreds of prisoners held in Iran for protesting against the country's pro-Western government.

Forcing branches to flower easy process

By Hudi Budge

Baltimore Sun

There is nothing more satisfying than watching a tree finally bloom. Yet it can seem like such a waiting game. To force branches to bloom, you can use commercial flowering hormones or natural methods like pulsing with warm water. Here’s how to make it happen:

1. Choose the right branches: Select branches that have been cut from the plant and are in a dormant state. Remove any leaves and discard them. This will help the branches to focus their energy on flowering.

2. Prepare the branches: Soak the branches in a bucket of water for 24 hours. This will help to remove any remaining leaf tissue and prevent the branches from rotting.

3. Apply the hormones: Apply flowering hormones to the cut ends of the branches. Follow the manufacturer’s instructions carefully.

4. Place the branches in a warm location: Place the branches in a warm, well-lit location to promote flowering.

5. Keep an eye on the progress: Within a few weeks, you should see the branches begin to bloom.
