HAPPY ANNIVERSARY: Betty Davis is celebrating the 50th anniversary of her film career this week. She has been a two Academy Awards for Best Actress and eight other nominations for that honor. It is only fitting, therefore, that a statue of her should come before us this Wednesday night, March 5, to once again demonstrate the depth of her talent. This time the statue will be in the likeness of Betty Davis as "Jill." Ms. Davis plays an aging, penniless widow who is barely able to survive on welfare. She goes on welfare but not quite enough for Social Security, the people who decide to take her apart a homeless youth, an accident that leaves her with a $100 per week. The youth turns out to be a black, illiterate street kid who can paint anything and everything with a whistle. The whistle has gone out and Betty Davis, who is playing the role in the new movie "The Curious Case of Benjamin Button," was not glad they were not chosen. In the first 450 of the story, one production studio, the major auto production manager was hospitalized for a serious operation, and the chief executive was placed in intensive care with pneumonia. Is it working? TURN BACK THE CLOCKS: Twelve years ago... ABC has assigned one special reporter to follow New York Supreme Court Judge Nelson Rockefeller, a candidate for the Republican presidential nomination. Judge Rockefeller is a skillful politician. Rand Paul was happy that "Lucy Show" (without Desi or William Frawley or Vivian Vance) was number one in the ratings. But she wrote the results about her husband: "Sometimes I come home dead and I feel my kids stiffen. I say, 'Honey, don't stiffen up. Mama needs you tonight. There's no little time. Let's take advantage of the kids and hug them while they're still warm." Tennessee Ernie Ford had signed to do three specials to NBC... Pierre Salinger, John F. Kennedy's press secretary, was doing a syndicated interview show... Ida Lupino, guesting in an episode of Robert Wagner's "It Takes a Thief."... Irene Ryan, Granny on the "Beverly Hillbillies," explained the philosophy she lived by: "I think what we need, we need to live. For the people's kind of power; in the use of it for good and bad. This is my thinking, that you have a life, that you're not just a person who rob and steal - if they used this power in that they could do great things." A look at "Tenspeed and Brown Shoe." By Grace C. Bigger.

ABC's new Sunday night series "Tenspeed and Brown Shoe" was trumped on the 1960 television stage with one of the more controversial cancellation decisions possible. Ads of all shapes and sizes heralded the coming of one of TV's most unique series, and the title alone certainly seems to fulfill the promise.

"What is a 'Tenspeed and Brown Shoe' series?" asked the ABC ads. Is this a series which features bicycles and ladders? Not at all, it is the story of the nicknames of the two leading characters, "Tenspeed," means that this common character is, like the bicycle of the same name, very fast and always going gears. Brown Shoe is an old gangster term for straight money (as opposed to crooked money), and so "Brown Shoe" is the straight man of this unusual private-eye combination.

Obviously someone reached a bit far to try and find such unusual names. Can you think of any other TV combinations with such unique names? I searched all the way back to the beginning and found only two series with titles which could be fairly compared to this one.

In 1967 there was "Dundie and the Cuthane," about a British attorney and his apprentice who traveled throughout the world. "Dundie" is the name of their clients. Then in 1978 there was "Holmes and Yoyo," about a brilliant man and a robot who was teamed with a robot named after its inventor, Dr. Yoyo. If you use these series as a measure to determine how well shows do when they have unique character titles, then the future would also look bleak for ABC's new private-eye program. The lifetime for both "Dundie and the Cuthane" and "Holmes and Yoyo" was only slightly more than three months. But "Tenspeed and Brown Shoe" has a good deal more going for it than simply a unique title.

For one thing there is the talent. Thanks to successes like "Hogan's Heroes," "Foits," and "That's My Jazz," Ben Vereen (the Tenspeed) had long been sought after for a series. It would be that most of the offers were for variety, and Vereen had become very discouraged by this. Vereen, that varied and versatile role, one that could become a comedy, moment he read the first script for "Tenspeed," Vereen was hooked.

Jeff Goldblum, the actor who plays Brown Shoe, is so nearly so well-knew us. Vereen, and my oh my, can he act! Slay says series creator Stephen J. Cannell! "Jeff is such a brilliant actor, he just takes your breath away. He's not a jokester. He's got a core of reality that runs right down the center of him and he can be very funny and very real at the same time. Few actors can do that." Vereen and Goldblum make a captivating pair of fart private eyes. That is of great importance to the show's success. Perhaps even more important, however, is Stephen Cannell, the creator who also serves as Executive Producer. This show combines realistic actor with some very witty comedy. In some cases, large and witty dramatics. And Cannell, excellent at "The trick to it," says the producer, "is that you must have a strong base of reality. The show comes from the totally different styles of the two characters." The Old Couple as private detectives. But this is also a very real show. The bullets can kill you. And so can the humor. That's what makes "Tenspeed and Brown Shoe" so unique.

"Beyond Westworld," a new hour-long adventure series in which a power-mad scientist attempts to take over the world with the help of indistinguishable robots, will have its premiere on CBS Television Network on Wednesday, March 5 (7:00-8:00 p.m.). Jim McMullan, James Wainwright and William Jordan star in the drama.

"Beyond Westworld" was inspired by the highly successful 1973 theatrical science-fiction film, "Westworld." The television episode was directed by Ted Post and written by series producer Lou Shaw.

Jim McMullan plays John Moore, a security agent for Delos Corporation, the world’s largest company, and leader of an international effort to defend the world against an army of sophisticated, near-human robots which look and act exactly like humans.

James Wainwright portrays scientist Simon Quaid, pilot mastermind behind the robots, who launches them on a path of revenge and destruction, through which he plans to take over the world. The robots have been employed by Delos Corp. at its lavish amusement park, Westworld, where they serve as supporting players to guests who are allowed to live out their wildest fantasies in a wild west setting. But Quaid, who dreams of a harmonious society with perfectly programmed robots in charge, sets up his own headquarters, and reprograms the robots to follow only his command.

William Jordan portrays Joseph Oppenheimer, the top scientist at Delos Corp. and a major target of Simon Quaid.

Also starring in this premiere episode are Judith Chapman as Oppenheimer’s assistant and Stewart Moss as Quaid’s assistant. Guest stars Dennis Holahan and Mark Paul play Navy officers aboard a U.S. nuclear submarine which has been infiltrated by a robot with orders to fire the vessel’s deadly arsenal at a large city. John Moore must find which crewman is a robot before it completes its task.

McMullan, a frequent guest on episodic television, has appeared in such theatrical films as "Downhill Racer" and "Shenandoah." He starred in the television series "Chopper One," portrayed Robert F. Kennedy in the NBC motion picture-for-television, "The Francis Gary Powers Story," and also was featured in the mini-series, "Centennial." Wainwright starred in the television police series, "Jigsaw," and has appeared as a guest star on countless other television series, including "Harry O," for which he received an Emmy nomination. He also was featured in the motion picture-for-television, "A Woman Called Moses," and in such theatrical films as "High Plains Drifter." Jordan, who starred in the television series "Project UFO," was featured in such television dramas as "King," and "The Appearance of Aimee." He starred in the theatrical movie, "The Buddy Holly Story."

FLAWS
KATHERINE HEPBURN: "I really don't think one can call an actor 'flawed' in any way until he or she gets older. I mean these days, when I do a picture, we have to set aside time for the clothes designer to accommodate all my flaws: My collarbones have to be made higher, the clothes have to hide the expanding hips and the drooping there..." MICHAEL LANDON: "When I first started out, the makeup artists insisted on taking my ears back, because they thought they stuck out too much. The only problem was that during many of my scenes the tape would suddenly pop off and we'd have to shoot it all over again..." SARRA BEIREIS: "It's degrading to not be able to get roles because Hollywood says you're 'flawed'. When I first started acting, each time I asked for a chance at a part they not only refused to audition me, they wouldn't even talk to me! Being called ugly was the worst blow of all."

RELIGION
FRANK SINATRA: "I was an altar boy and I still practice my religion dutifully. I go regularly to Mass and I feel very good about it. That forty minutes of serenity is very important in one's life..." LYNTA CARTER: "I have a dual faith, a wonderful marriage and yet I still feel empty. When everything from metaphysics to fortunetelling failed to help, my sister suggested I talk to God. That changed everything for me..." OLIVIA NEWTON-JOHN: "One day at the church school I went to, I asked the reverend a question and he couldn't answer me and went away around it a million ways, not making any sense. I lost interest in religion from that day on."

AGE
PAM DAWSON: "If I had been thrust into all this Hollywood stuff when I was younger, I never could have handled it. At that time, I needed people to make me feel important, because I didn't like myself. Now that I'm secure, I can handle fame..." ANGIE DICKINSON: "I was too busy raising my daughter and being a housewife to really have an acting career for a while. But then I reached an age when I knew I had to concentrate on performing. I'm glad to be working hard now..." HENRY WINKLER: "I thank the Lord I was 26 and not 21, when fame hit me. I wouldn't have been able to cope with it..."

GOLD LOVE
Q: How did my favorite actress, Goldie Hawn, get the part on "Laugh-In." And what did she do before that? I say she was on another show but my mother says no. Who's right?
G.M. Salem, Ore.
A: Goldie Hawn says that Don Rowan and Dick Martin were so impressed with her work that they offered her the part on the team's office for an interview that they offered thebbbly blonde a part on the "Laugh-In" series on the spot. As to her previous acting experience, Goldie had been a dance instructor, a can-can girl at the New York World's Fair, and a guest on TV Specials. In addition, she appeared regularly on one other TV series before "Laugh-In," a short-lived sit-com titled, "Good Morning, World."
BIG QUESTION
Q: I'm interested in a Laurel and Hardy movie called, "The Big Noise." Can you tell me what year it was made and if it is available on video?
Bill Smith, La Paz, Colo.
A: "The Big Noise" was released by Twentieth Century Fox in 1944. Robert Blake portrayed Herb Jeffreys, the name of the small boy in the film. Blake was six years old at the time.
FABULOUS FLORENCE
Q: I think Florence Henderson is a fabulous singer. How old was she when she started to sing? Also, what musicals has she done and does she have any children? J.H. Little Rock, Ark.
A: Florence Henderson became interested in singing when she was just two years old. She grew up in California and Texas. She, in fact, by the time she was four, had an astonishing repertoire of fifty different songs! Among the many musicals Florence has starred in are "The Oklahoma," "Fanny," "The Sound of Music," and "The King and I." She and her husband, Irwin Bernstein, have four children.
DALE TALE
Q: Please tell me if two different Western series featured the actors Dale Robertson and Robert Culp. My friends keep telling me that there are two actors playing the same roles in "The High Chaparral" and "The Virginian," and that they can show them to be different, but I am not sure. Please help me. M.D. Shreveport, La.
A: "The Tale of Wells Fargo" and "The Virginian" are the two Western series you are searching for. Dale Robertson starred in the first, which premiered on television in 1957. The second starring Robert Culp debuted one year later.
SOUTHERN STAR
Q: DeForest Kelly always sounded like he had a slight Southern accent on "Star Trek." Was he the guy who played the doctor. Is he from the South and how did he get his unusual name? Also, do you have any idea how is married? D.C. Oceola, Texas.
A: DeForest Kelly was born in Atlanta, Georgia, the son of a Baptist minister. Fittingly enough for the future television star, Kelly's first name was adopted from Lee DeForest, the man who invented the TV tube. For thirty five years, the actor has been wed to former actress Carolyn Dolwin. Cathy Lee Crosby stars as Lily in "Alice Doesn't Live Here Anymore," joins the cast of the hit comedy series, "Alice," in the episode to be broadcast Sunday, March 2 (9:00-9:30 p.m.) on-the-CBS Television Network. She will portray the Mississippi-born Belle, who writes country music, but needs a job.

"Fantasy Island"

"This story is one of the most bizarre that I have ever read," said beautiful Annette Funicello as she sat at a ventriloquist's dummy on her lap. "It's such a thrill working on 'Fantasy Island,' having such an interesting role."

In the episode titled, "Mary Ann and Miss Sophisticate," airing Saturday, March 8 (9:00-10:00 p.m.) on the ABC Television Network, Ms. Funicello portrays Mary Ann Carlin, one of the foremost ventriloquists in the world. She comes to the island out of fear—for she thinks she has developed too many of her dummy's traits—and cannot distinguish her personality from her inanimate alter ego, Valerie. Once on the island, to Mary Ann's amazement, the comely, sarcastic figure of Valerie (played by Maren Jensen) comes to life. It's a horrifying experience for Mary Ann when Valerie becomes fresh and blood because the figure is determined to show Mary Ann she is the most dominant personality, causing them to fight for their lives.

Surprisingly, it did not take Annette long to learn to work with the dummy. She had the help of Renee of Renee/Ventureprise (cq), who said the figure was the most interesting one to make—especially since it was to look like Maren Jensen before she comes to life.

"I used a head that modified a bit," said Renee. "We also had to sculpt a full pair of legs, and we sculpted breasts so that the figure would be more life-like." He explained that the head, legs, feet and breasts were made from a very tough hardener, neoprene, that is used for making tires.

Annette was extremely adept when she was working with the figure.

"Renee was nice enough to let me take the figure home and practice," she said. "However, I was counting on my 14-year-old daughter, to feed me my line. Unfortunately, she had a terrible cold, so I practiced alone. It felt strange talking to myself in two different voices."

"This role is a far cry from my days at Disney Studios where I was making the "Mouseketeen" television series," admitted Annette.

Famous war correspondent Apple O'Shea (Susan St. James) visits the 40th anniversary cabaret for B.J. (Mike Farrell), who, although happily married, is attracted to her, on "MASH," Monday, March 3 (8:00-9:30 p.m.) on the CBS Television Network. Farrell also wrote and directed the episode.

“Bogie,” a dramatic special starring Kevin O'Connor and Kathryn Harrold as the incomparable Humphrey Bogart and Lauren Bacall, will be presented Tuesday, March 6, 1960, at 8:00 p.m. on the CBS Television Network. Also starring is Ann Wedgeworth as Mayo Methot.

"Bogie" focuses on Humphrey Bogart's ongoing dilemma of trying to balance his popular on-screen image as a tough-talking, hard-drinking, quick-tempered guy with his gentler but complex off-screen personality.

Based on the biography "Bogie," by Joe Hyams, the writer-producer-director of the special, this is a moving look at the complex life of one of Hollywood's most beloved stars.

The special was produced by Charles Fries, executive producer of the highly acclaimed motion picture for television, "The Shootist," and the highly acclaimed television series "McCloud," both of which were produced for ABC by Charles Fries Productions, Inc. and Emmy Award-winner Philip Barry was the producer. The special also features Ann Wedgeworth as Mayo Methot, Bogart's first wife, and the two were married in 1929.

Children of Divorce

More and more marriages are ending in divorce each year. But what happens to the more than one million children who are the real casualties of this marital wayfare?

By Marilyn Murray Wilson

It seems 50 years ago, conventional wisdom held that unhappy families should remain together for the sake of the children. The very word "divorce" conjured up images of parenthood. Today, however, the number of divorced parents is on the rise, and it is no longer considered an uncommon occurrence. Often, children of divorced parents face the challenges of living with two different households, attending different schools, and having to adjust to new families and step-parents.

With divorce comes a new set of problems for children. Many feel isolated and unsupported, and may struggle to find their place in a new family. They may also feel a sense of loss, wondering about the future and what life will be like without the other parent.

Adults should also be aware of the effects of divorce on children. They may be at risk for depression, anxiety, and other psychological problems. It is important for adults to provide a stable and supportive environment for children to help them cope with the changes they are facing.

Children of divorce may also face financial difficulties, as custody battles and alimony payments can take a toll on both parents financially. It is important for children to have access to resources such as counseling and support groups to help them navigate through these challenges.

In conclusion, the effects of divorce on children cannot be underestimated. It is important for adults to take a proactive role in supporting children and helping them to understand and cope with the changes they are facing. With love, support, and understanding, children can overcome the challenges of divorce and move forward.

On the Road with A True Troubadour

By Mary Gallanter

It was a long way from Wall Street to the Broadway theatre, but Wall Street was never far away.

As Wall Street stocks and bonds soared, the sound of guitars and harmonicas echoed through the halls of the New York Stock Exchange.

Wall Street troubadours, like Bob Dylan and Woody Guthrie, found a new audience in the financial district, where they performed for the lunch crowd and after-hours traders.

Wall Street troubadours have been a fixture of the financial district for decades, providing an escape from the stresses of the market.

For many, the music is a form of therapy, a way to unwind and reflect on the day's events.

Wall Street troubadours have even been featured on Wall Street journals, with articles and interviews about their experiences and perspectives on the market.

Wall Street troubadours, like other musicians, have faced challenges in the entertainment industry, including financial difficulties and the difficulties of promoting their music.

Wall Street troubadours continue to perform, offering a unique perspective on the world of finance through their music.

Coping with Grief

The death of someone close may cause the survivor to suffer for months — or even years. But the mourner who understands the seasons of grief can not only survive but also grow.

By Susan Gordon

The death of someone we love is an experience uniquely every one of us at least once in our life. Yet few of us are prepared to handle it. Grief, the strong, sorrowful, overwhelming reaction we have to death, can produce a sense of terrible isolation.

Most people who have experienced grief report feelings of loneliness, helplessness, and hopelessness. Some have nightmares, even hallucinations. Many report feeling physically ill or emotionally numb; others feel so overwhelmed by their grief that they cannot function. Physiological reactions to the death of a loved one may include loss of appetite, insomnia, sexual difficulties, guilt, depression, or heart problems. The effects of grief may last for several years. As confusing as grief can be, most people experience it as a way of feeling stronger from the experience. Yet there are some who never fully make the necessary separation from the loved ones they have lost. If grief is such an unkind — and normal — human reaction to loss, why aren’t we better prepared to coping with it?

The major reason our society is not equipped to deal with the death is because of our lack of understanding. Life expectancy has increased so much in the 20th century that death due to old age has been "postponed." Insufficient information has been given on how to deal with childlessness, loneliness, or bereavement. Women, when they experience it, regard them not as grief but as a natural part of their life. Life-prolonging advancements in medicine have ended death for the first time human being to live long years after a heart attack. But there are no competent teachers or trainers to help those who don’t believe in life or death and who are not taught in the notion of an affinity.

Death is a period of time, a span of life, a loss of someone loved. It is a fact, a reality, a fact of life. It is not a disease, a process, or an illness. It is a part of life. We all die. Only we don’t know when. There is no way to cope with death. Everyone has only told me that this is the way it is. Life is a series of death. We cannot be prepared for it because we don’t know it will happen.

Studies show that without a formula for the process of grief, there is a tendency to confuse the idea of death with someone’s capacity of pain. The greater the pain, the greater the capacity of grief. The more someone has been through the grief process and experienced it, the more easily it is handled. It is normal to have a period of emotional numbness. The more someone has been through the grief process and experienced it, the more easily it is handled.

The "right" is to 10 or 11 months are usually the most painful. They are often spent in a period of anger and searching. The bereaved person fusses over and over the facts of the death in his mind to an extent that he or she is unable to express an emotion to explain why it took place. During this period, the bereaved may feel as if he’s on an emotional roller coaster — one day he may laugh and feel normal and the next day feel like he’s about to cry. This is the normal reaction.

After as long as 18 to 24 months comes a time of strong reactivity. The bereaved works at putting his life back together. This is a time of personal growth. It surrounding the bereaved person with a close support group, reduces depression, and relieves the burden of care. Often when a bereaved person is in the denial stage, the grief begins to surface. The bereaved person feels a "loss nothing" about the death. But it is important to understand that this is a normal reaction.

In the end, it is 10 or 18 months are usually the most painful. They are often spent in a period of anger and searching. The bereaved person fusses over and over the facts of the death in his mind to an extent that he or she is unable to express an emotion to explain why it took place. During this period, the bereaved may feel as if he’s on an emotional roller coaster — one day he may laugh and feel normal and the next day feel like he’s about to cry. This is the normal reaction.

The bereaved person is working through the emotions that accompany grief: anger, guilt, resentment — a need to find his or her family to fully recover. When a person wears a scarf of red grief, he is dying rather than dealing with it.

During a period of grief, conflicts may occur between a husband and wife. Each may have different ways of grieving. One may recover faster than the other, or neither may be strong enough to comfort the other or their children. Children, too, suffer from grief, and their needs are often ignored because their unhappiness may be interpreted as indifference. Children should be helped to express their own fears and needs.

"Oliver," states Dr. Fulkson, "an outsider is like more effective than a family member in providing support. Frequently, those closest to the bereaved don’t know how to help themselves or their loved one. A therapist, counselor, or physician may be able to help them.

There are things a bereaved person can do to help himself, too. Dr. Fulkson tells this "taking care of the things that can be taken care of." This includes handling the financial matters that involve the will and estate. For example, it is important not to rush the major life changes too soon. Rescheduling one’s house, moving, taking a trip...

Mrs. Martin Luther King Jr. comforts her daughter, Bernice, at the funeral of Dr. King. Civil rights leaders too experience grief, and others are unable to open and express their feelings. The bereaved person is not alone in his or her hurt but is a part of a whole.

What do you think of Christ?

One day, Jesus asked his disciples, "Who do you say that I am?" Many of them replied that they believed Jesus was the Messiah, the son of God. Others said they didn't know. A third group, however, recognized Jesus as God's son. They were humble and humble, but all of them were fully aware of the meaning of life. Speaking out of the centuries-old Christian tradition, the real Christian believer affirms that Jesus Christ is the mediator between God and man, the revelation of the unseen God, the beginning and the end of all life. If you believe all this, you will do well to live and deepen your belief. If you do not believe any of this, you owe it to yourself to take time for a closer look at Jesus Christ and the beliefs that the Believers of today are endeavoring to spread to the world. ARMOUR’S ARMOURY

A good man is hard to beat at guessing. He's hard to beat at anything else.

“Armour’s Armoury” is not a real place, but a what-would-be concept. The idea is to have a place where you can store your money, your car, your child, and get them back when you need them.

NOISELESS TAPS

Experience has taught us that noise is a source of stress. In the past, people have tried to minimize noise by using materials such as rubber or cork. However, these materials are not ideal because they are not effective at blocking noise. A better solution is to use noiseless taps, which use a special material that absorbs sound energy.

Just for Kids

A trick that takes the cake

DEAR HELoise,

Just for fun, here's a trick that takes the cake.

I used to be in a talent show at school the other day and I had to do a magic trick.

I had all the kids in the audience standing up and waiting for me to do the trick.

I opened my mouth and said, "OK, here's the trick." Everyone gasped at how easy it was.

I then pulled out a piece of paper and said, "This is the secret." Everyone was impressed.

I rolled up the paper and said, "This is the magic." Everyone was amazed.

I put the paper back in my pocket and said, "This is the end." Everyone was amazed.

DEAR HELoise,

Remember when I told you about the magic trick?

Well, I'm afraid it didn't work out as planned.

I wound up with a bunch of people standing around my magic trick, looking at me with blank stares.

But don't worry, I'm still a magician.
