Gas Futures Sales Halted

By Kerry Kelly Staff Writer

OKLAHOMA CITY - A temporary order prohibiting sales at the Mercantile Monday appeared to have no effect on the sales at the Mercantile on the same day. The traders appeared to be unsure of the effect of the order on the sales. The traders were eligible to sell futures for the next 24 hours.

Gas prices also appeared to be unaffected by the order. The traders appeared to be willing to sell futures for the next 24 hours. The traders were eligible to sell futures for the next 24 hours.

Draper Has Reservations About Railroad Proposal

By Harry Darby

The state executive committee of the Railroad Association of Oklahoma has raised questions about the proposal to build a new railroad line from Draper to Norman. The committee has expressed concern about the potential impact on the existing railroad network and the cost of the new line.

Draper Mayor C. A. Smith said that the committee's concerns were valid but that the city would continue to support the proposal. He said that the committee's concerns were valid but that the city would continue to support the proposal.

Heavy Rains Pound Deep South

As United Press International reported, the Deep South and eastern Texas are under threat of heavy rains and flooding. The National Weather Service has issued flood warnings for several areas, and officials have urged residents to take precautions.

Black and Tanskin, terror agents of history, could have been employed by the government in the coming years to help contain the epidemic. The disease has already claimed the lives of several thousand people in the U.S., and experts fear it could spread to other countries.
Enzyme Technology: Best Hope For Gasohol Savings

By Linda Price

In fact, the request for ethanol alcohol that rose up from the landlubber states was a result of an effort to reduce the cost of gasoline. The unexpected surge in gasoline prices caused by the Arab oil embargo of 1973 led to an increased demand for alternative fuels. With the development of enzyme technology, there was hope that ethanol could be produced on a large scale, offering a renewable source of energy.
