Dayan Says United States 'Too Weak' In Middle East

Lois Davis
New York (UPI) - 'Too Weak' in the Middle East is a term that has been used by many people to describe the United States. It is noteworthy that the United States has long been a strong and powerful nation, but in recent years, it appears that its influence in the Middle East region has diminished. This is partly due to the failure of the United States to take strong and decisive action in the face of escalating tensions in the region. The United States has been accused of being too weak in the face of aggression by its enemies in the Middle East. This has led to a loss of respect and confidence in the United States, which in turn has undermined its ability to lead and influence events in the region. It is hoped that the United States will take strong and decisive action in the future to restore its reputation and regain its position as a leader in the Middle East.

Black Vote Not Wedded To Carter

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Blacks are unhappy with President Carter, and he had better make sure that they are not too unhappy when he puts his well-known black face in front of them in 1980 if he wants to win a second term.

"I don’t think," said a black Democratic leader, "that Carter is in a position to say to blacks, ‘I’m the only one who is going to help you.’ He’s got too much to lose."

"If he doesn’t reach out, then he’s in trouble."

The question is whether Carter can reach out to blacks in the next four years in a way that makes them feel they have been treated as equals by the administration.

"If you don’t reach out, then you’re in trouble," another black official said. "If you don’t reach out, then you’re in trouble."
