Carter’s Crackdown Should Avoid Conflict

Jack Anderson

WASHINGTON — Despite sharp lapses of military discipline, President Carter's administration is taking steps to avoid conflict with the military. However, some observers believe that a military decision to use force in the face of continued unrest could create a dangerous situation.

Although there is some concern about how effective Carter’s efforts to prevent conflict will be, there is a general consensus that the administration is taking the right steps.

The administration has made an effort to consult with the military before making any decisions. This has been particularly important given the sensitive nature of the situation.

However, some observers believe that the administration could do more to ensure that the military understands its role in maintaining peace. This is particularly important given the potential for a military decision to use force.

Freezing weather greeted farmers as they began to harvest their crops. The cold temperatures have caused some problems, but overall the crop season has been successful.

The weather has been particularly cold in the northern part of the state, where some crops have been affected. However, farmers in the southern part of the state have been able to harvest their crops successfully.

The cold weather has also caused some problems for livestock. Many farmers have had to keep their animals indoors to protect them from the cold.

The cold temperatures have also affected the state’s tourism industry. Many people have canceled their trips to the area because of the cold weather.

The state’s transportation system has also been affected by the cold. Many roads have been closed due to the heavy snowfall.

Draft Registration: A Credibility Problem

Commentary

The draft system has been criticized for its lack of credibility. Many people believe that the system is outdated and ineffective.

The draft system is based on the idea that all men should serve in the military. However, this idea is no longer relevant in today’s world, where women and minorities are also required to serve.

The draft system is also criticized for its lack of transparency. Many people believe that the system is not fair, and that some groups are more likely to be drafted than others.

This Week/Rolling Stone
Shrapnel flies at party tossed by writer Miller

Myron Miller

A couple of months ago, former Rolling Stone editor and author Robert Christgau and his wife, the celebrated novelist Joyce Cary, threw a party at their home in the Hollywood Hills for some of the finest talents in the music industry. Among those in attendance were musicians such as Bob Dylan, Van Morrison, and John Lennon. The party was, in essence, a Who's Who of rock and roll royalty.

The event was held on the evening of February 14th, and the guests were greeted with a lavish spread of food and drink. As the night wore on, the music grew more intense, and the partygoers became increasingly rowdy.

However, it was not all fun and games. A few hours into the party, one of the attendees, a prominent music critic, accidentally dropped a glass of wine on the floor. The spillage quickly spread throughout the room, causing panic and chaos among the guests. The situation was worsened by the fact that the music was at its loudest, making it difficult for anyone to hear the commotion.

In the midst of the commotion, another guest, a well-known rock star, became disoriented and wandered off. The crowd searched frantically for him, but to no avail.

Finally, the situation was brought under control when a member of the security staff arrived on the scene. The party was eventually called off, and the guests were asked to leave the premises immediately.

Despite the incident, the party was widely regarded as a success, with many of those in attendance expressing their gratitude to the hosts for their hospitality.
