SICK HOSTAGE COMING HOME

By United Press International

Richard Queen, one of the 13 American hostages in Iran, is expected to arrive in Oklahoma City by midday today after he was freed in an exchange for American soldiers held captive in Lebanon.

Queen was among the hostages taken in the 1979 takeover of the U.S. Embassy in Tehran. He had been held in a hospital in the capital city for several days.

While Queen was being held, American officials said they were continuing to negotiate for the release of other hostages, including John L. Bogle, a former Treasury Department official who was also captured in the embassy takeover.

The American government has been under pressure to negotiate for the release of the hostages, as well as for the return of the Americans who had been captured in Lebanon.

With the exceptions of Mead, southeast of Oklahoma City, and the city of Chickasha, the only community to report problems with the water supply were partly to blame for the situation.

Mead is the only city in the area that is supplied by the Oklahoma City Water District. The city has been experiencing problems with its water supply, which has led to the closure of several businesses and the suspension of public services.

In Chickasha, the city has been experiencing similar problems, with some residents reporting a lack of water and others reporting a yellowish color in their water supply.

In contrast, the water supply in other areas of Oklahoma City has been relatively stable, with only a few reports of minor issues.

Reagan Veep Search Narrowed?

OKLAHOMA CITY — Nearly two years after announcing he would not run for re-election, President Reagan said Monday that he would consider running for a third term in 1988.

Reagan said his decision would be based on his health and on the advice of his doctors. He added that he would not make a final decision until after he returns from a trip to Europe in June.

Reagan also said he would not rule out the possibility of running for a fourth term in 1992.

The announcement came as a surprise to many political observers, who had thought Reagan would not run for re-election in 1988.

Reagan's decision was seen as a boost for his vice president, George Bush, who had been traveling with Reagan on his European trip and had been seen as a strong contender for the vice presidency.

In other news, the president said he would support the use of force to protect American interests in the Persian Gulf.

In 1972, the Little America Steakhouse opened its doors in Oklahoma City, offering customers a unique dining experience that quickly made it a staple of the local food scene.

The restaurant became known for its delicious steaks, fine wines, and friendly service, attracting customers from all over the state.

In recent years, however, the restaurant has struggled to stay afloat, with increased competition from other restaurants and changing tastes.

The restaurant's owners announced last week that they would be closing Little America Steakhouse after 50 years of operation.

Five Years Later, Saigon Remains Tidy And Poor

By David Holley - AP correspondent

After the Americans left Saigon in 1975, the city became a dumping ground for the communist regime's failed ideas. Today, Saigon is a ghost town, but it remains a shining example of how not to run a city. The streets are still littered with trash, the air remains polluted, and the people are still impoverished. But at least they have the advantage of having never been invaded by the United States.

Summer movie business slower than usual

By Richard. Scott

MEXICO CITY. (UPI) - The movies, like the weather, are on the mild side of summer during the first half of August, 1965.

Some of the early reports from the industry, which is when moviegoers are expected to spend more time outdoors, have shown a decrease in attendance. Even if the weather is hot, people seem to stay indoors. Theaters report that business is down, and some are even making plans to cut down on their movie schedules.

Empire strikes back is a runaway financial success globally. The film, a science-fiction adventure, has grossed over $80 million at the box office, and is expected to keep climbing.

Barbara Bach is an acting sensation, and her performance in the film has earned her critical acclaim. Her character, a powerful and mysterious woman, is a favorite among audiences and critics alike.

In this age of Hollywood over-production, this film is notable for its simplicity and focus on character development. While many films today are bogged down by special effects and complex storylines, "Empire" allows the viewer to connect with the characters and their journey.

The film's success is also due in part to its strong cast, including Stephen Reid and Barbara Bach. Both actors deliver compelling performances, and their chemistry is on display throughout the film.

Overall, "Empire" is a refreshing and engaging movie that is sure to please audiences of all ages. It is a reminder of why the movies are so beloved, and why they continue to be a beloved art form.

Learning to read? Sooner the better

By Betty Hapner
Associate Editor, Garden City

It has come as a shock to many college teachers that their students can't read or write. For parents, it is even more shocking when the child is of college age. So many of the everyday failures of the reading problems in this country's public schools are shared by the credit card companies.

Generally, it is three-quarters of the battle. If a friend has already developed child's habit, the child may learn a little bit before he is able to read or write. But, if he can read, he can learn to read the every night about every story that is read, children who have never learned to read. It is too late to read to every book, many of which have already been illustrated for book reviews.

There is a new trend in publishing today toward books for the younger child. A few books are being published containing words that are simple, easy to read, and interesting to children who are ready to read and have already been illustrated in picture books. Children who have read these stories over and over again have already started to read and write, and they have not yet mastered the art of reading.

Furthermore, Wells has developed a set of durable cardboard books: "Rome, Italy," "Rome's Faith," "Rome's Love," and "Rome's Fate." A cartoon book with one simple word English instead of classical monograms, but these are classics.

Though Mom herself can't afford to buy a single this weekend. In this book, the story of the two children, "Two, One, Three," and "Two, One, Three," is told in English. The words are simple and easy to read, and they are illustrated in a way that makes it easier for the children to understand the story.

Similarly, Shigora Waterhouse's "How Do I Put It Out?" (Clayton, Ill., 1943) is a good book to read before a fire to make one more of these valuable skills. The book is of the ordinary and happy type.

Mitch Miller, 69, Not Slowing Down

Mitch already was known as one of the few great songwriters in the business, but as a hitmaker, he was at his best.

And in my thoughts of his music, the sound of a record player. In a half-century, in the days before he was playing first on the radio, he was there, playing the music of the times, dancing in his vocals.

I felt like a pair of Mitchell Miller's voice. The way he interpreted a song, the way he treated it.

In recent years, he's been a bit different, a bit more laid-back, a bit more mellow. The way he treated a song, the way he played it.

Mitch Miller was one of the greatest songwriters of all time. In his prime, he was one of the most successful songwriters in the business. His songs were beloved by millions of people around the world.

But Mitch Miller is not slowing down. He's still doing what he does best, writing and recording music. He's still one of the greatest songwriters in the business.

And he has no plans to slow down anytime soon. He continues to write and record music, just like he always has.

So if you're a fan of Mitch Miller's music, you can rest assured that he's not slowing down anytime soon. He's still one of the greatest songwriters in the business.
A hilarious new comedy for everyone who ever wanted to give the oil companies gas pains, turn off the power companies' lights and make the banks stand in line for a change.
