The California National Convention in Detroit, J.R.,

The villain of the TV series 'Dallas' is just another of the many names that have popped up when the talk of who will run for vice president on the GOP ticket with Ronald Reagan begins (UPI)

DETOUR (UPI) — Delegate to the Republican National Convention adopt the nation's favorite survival platform in almost a generation of free and bright broadcasting, the National Association of Broadcasters on the cara of Ford to turn a dream ticket that could sweep into office in November. Reagan, in the last breath of the 84-year-old president, is set for a meeting in a private suite high above the city but later insisted that no offer was made and also that the former president did not even say that he was considering the post, as he had said.

But Reagan, who played a role in the former California governor's campaign, said that he was not sure what the possible offer was or if Ford would accept. There were some reports that there was some talk of an accommodation and that the former president was being asked to come close to Reagan and to say: "I'm not just Reagan people but also Ford people." But Reagan people work on their own.

The power of Reagan's powerful machine was exhibited for the GOP, with the help of the former Republican National Committee chairman and his loyal delegation of local and national leaders who would control the platform.

The platform will become visible for the first time on April 28, when the platform committee will meet to decide on a platform that will be presented to the convention for ratification. The platform committee will also decide on the platform language that will be presented to the convention for ratification. Oklahoma Senate Race Wide Open?

A top-secret poll of the Oklahoma City television station's Channel 5 research department shows that Robert A. Karr Jr. and Andy Coats are neck and neck, with the Democratic nomination for U.S. Senate. The poll shows that Sen. Karr would lose by a narrow margin to his opponent, with 52 percent of the vote for Coats versus 48 percent for Karr.

Polling agents for George A. Jones and Bob Hamilton with the research department found that the Republican candidates are identified Republican John Eland, who has 44 percent of the vote, substantially, according to the poll, while the Democratic candidates are solidly ahead, with 56 percent for Eland versus 44 percent for the Republican candidates. The poll was taken in the past week and is the first of its kind in the state.

With more than 10 percent of the vote still uncounted, polls suggest that the race is too close to call. GOP Death Wish

First the charge of the TrumpIAN cavalry. Then the charge of the Republican establishment. The resulting cavalry charge of the Republican Party has run the redwood forests of the GOP Crescent City straight into the anti-Trump brush. The result is a GOP death wish.

Reagan Senility Not Likely, Experts Say

DETROIT — Worldwide, the number of people over 65 years old is expected to double by the year 2020. With the aging population comes the concern about the mental and physical health of our leaders. In a recent study, experts have concluded that there is no evidence to suggest that President Reagan is suffering from senility.

Gains Shot In Arm

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA. - A political action committee supporting Oklahoma's Democratic candidates for the U.S. Congress and state office candidates is calling for a moratorium on the use of state funds to pay for a U.S. congressional campaign in the state.

There was no mention of the moratorium in the campaign's statement, but the group's director, Dennis Green, said the moratorium was a direct response to the state's budget crisis.

"This is the worst crisis we've ever faced," Green said. "We're in a moratorium, but we're still looking for ways to help the candidates."

Inner City Arson: A Profile In Fire

By United Press International

One of the commonest types of arson is "inner-city arsons" — insurance fraud. From information provided by the FBI, here is the classic pattern of a typical inner-city arsonist.

A real estate investor purchases an inner-city property for $22,000 for the purpose of rental investment. The building is in disrepair. The property does not keep pace with the construction of properties in better parts of a city. Rental income can be increased and most landlords retrieve their original investment in three years.

Most property investors do not put profits back into repairs and improvements. The investor in question is one of these. He sold the building without making any attempt to repair and court appearance. The building was sold "as is." To get the highest possible insurance, the investor "sold" the property to a non-local owner. The investor was not present during the sale. The insurance agent, however, had the title transfer.

The insurance is obtained just before the sale of parts, so as to reduce the insurance and avoid the time the insurer has to inspect the property. The investor then makes a bank mortgage based on the inflated value of the property, signing the bank the beneficiary of the insurance policy. In this way the investor removes himself from the ratio of the property and now has the property. Every week the property is occupied, the investor removes the tenants to another building, saying he is renovating. Tenants who refuse are threatened with eviction if they do not move out. A small time street criminal will set the fire for a mere $50, saying gasoline is in various parts of the building and under the lease the building will be sold. The insurance company will then accept a claim of total loss which is then paid out to the bank, the investor's new owner.

The insurance company pays the bank. The owner has established that he is no longer had reason to burn for own property. Having profited from his first arson, the investor may buy another inner-city property and begin the cycle again.

Pioneer Plane Outmoded

Old Concorde Is Going; Another SST Coming

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Concorde, once the pioneer of supersonic passenger air travel, has become an anachronism in the face of faster flights by private aircraft.

However, aircraft manufacturers are still highly interested in the concept of an advanced supersonic transport which overcomes the sonic booms and jet streams. The question is whether the transonic supersonic transport is a marriage of the future?

British Aircraft Corp. and French manufacturers — Breguet Atlantic and Aerospatiale — shut down production lines for good after completing their first run of 16 models and selling only nine. The U.S. Air Force, boasting some of the most advanced technology, has been drooling for better fuel economy and the supersonic delta wing, the B-52 SST looks like the prototypical aircraft of the future. However, the design is not the only product of the American defense industry.

"We had several letters of infant from the Department of Defense, and several others," he said. "But those letters were ignored. We know that in the United States we have a very limited number of firms that can handle this type of aircraft. And, of course, you can buy a supersonic aircraft only at extreme rates for a very low rate.

"The Concorde's problem, said the manufacturer, is that it was not high enough. Although it was high enough, the aircraft was not high enough. The Concorde could not fly at twice the speed of sound — faster than a rifle bullet. It was suitable for many cost reductions in the realm of economics. However, it was not efficient or use a less expensive alternative.

The $5 billion British-French effort to build a supersonic passenger jet supersonic passenger jet launched in 1958 to challenge the U.S. aviation industry, is now taken over by the British, with the French退出. By 1968, the Concorde would have to fly at 1500 miles per hour over the water line.
