U.S. Halts Foreign Aid To Bolivia

WASHINGTON (AP) - The United States Friday halted all military aid to Bolivia, which it said had failed to meet most of its military and administrative personnel to the United States, despite the presence of the United States military and United Nations personnel in the country.

The move, announced Friday by the State Department, followed a decision by the United States to suspend all but a limited amount of aid to Bolivia. The United States had already suspended all non-humanitarian aid to Bolivia, including $30 million in military assistance.

The United States had previously threatened to cut aid to Bolivia if it did not improve its human rights record. The United States had said that Bolivia was failing to protect the rights of its people, including the rights of people of color, women, and people with disabilities.

"This is a clear message to the Bolivian government that it must make significant changes to its policies and practices," said a State Department official. "We cannot continue to provide military aid to a country that so flagrantly violates the human rights of its people."

The move is the latest in a series of actions taken by the United States to limit its support for the Bolivian government. In March, the United States cut off all non-humanitarian aid to Bolivia, including $30 million in military assistance.
