Even 10 years before the first rumble of the Republican canon, it was a wise Carter family rule to keep the house buttoned up when the President telephones. The Carter boys (and at least one girl) have a long-standing tradition of keeping the phones off, or making the calls seem to be coming from a distant town. This weekend, the Carter family will be in Washington, D.C., and Jimmy Carter will be in New York City, to see his wife, Rosalynn, who is in the hospital. Jimmy Carter is running for re-election in 1980.

Jimmy Carter's Race For Re-election

Four years ago, Jimmy Carter won the presidency largely on the basis of his 660 campaign promises. Now Americans feel he kept those promises will determine whether Jimmy Carter will be elected to a second term.
Coming Home: When Grown Kids Return to the Nest

By Susan Lapinicki

An increasing number of young adults are moving back into the nest — at least temporarily.

The trend is more than just a matter of necessity. While some still believe in the traditional notion of "living on your own" as a rite of passage, others see it as a practical move. Many young people are finding it difficult to establish their own households, especially when they are starting out in their careers. This is particularly true for those living in high-cost areas where the cost of housing can be prohibitive.

For others, moving back home is simply a way to save money. With the current economic climate, many young people are finding it difficult to save enough money to cover the expenses of living on their own. By moving back into the nest, they can save money and focus on building their careers.

The decision to move back home is not made lightly. It is often a difficult choice, as it can be a source of stress for both the young adult and their parents. However, with the right attitude and approach, it can be a positive experience for all involved.

In conclusion, the trend of young adults moving back into the nest is a reflection of the current economic climate and the challenges that many young people are facing. While it may not be the ideal solution for everyone, it is one that is gaining popularity as a practical and cost-effective option.

Optical Illusions are well known. Here is a simple illustration that produces one. A small black dot is used to have moved if you look.

Eyes closed, cross your first and second fingers. You then place a matchstick or pencil, etc., between fingers, as shown in the above illustration. Now, an optical illusion, the match stick appears to be part of the object and regular for its position.

To experiment further, place objects in front of match stick, noting your reactions.

WHAT'S UP? Our friend at top left seems to be getting along swimmingly—or is it a mistake? Draw time to see.
