Nigh Needed The Change

By Kyle Goddard

Oklahoma City, Okla., George Nigh was the major figure in the most dramatic incident at the Democratic National Convention in New York City last week. Robert Kennedy also was an important figure, but New York City police and the Democratic National Convention authorities had no public relations problems after the Nigh incident was over.

The story unfolded Tuesday when the governor was released from the New York City jail and later was greeted by a cheering crowd in front of the Democratic National Convention Hall.

State officials, including Attorney General Robert Kennedy, were not amused by the incident and expressed their displeasure to New York City officials.

The incident occurred when Nigh attended a meeting in the hotel where the convention was being held. Nigh expressed his support for the Democratic ticket and was denied access to the convention floor.

The following day, Nigh was arrested and charged with disorderly conduct. He was released on bail pending a court hearing.

State officials said they would continue to monitor the situation and would take action if necessary.

The event was the latest in a series of incidents at the convention, which has been marred by violence and unrest.

NCAA Turns Thumbs Down On Plea By OSU's Waits

By Al Helfrich

Sports

The NCAA has denied OSU's request for a waiver to allow its women's tennis team to participate in the NCAA postseason.

In a letter to OSU Athletic Director Mike Holder, NCAA Executive Director Larry Meryll explained the decision.

"The NCAA's governing body has reviewed the request, and, while the waiver was granted by the NCAA's Women's Tennis Committee, it was overturned by the NCAA Board of Directors," Meryll wrote.

The waiver was granted by the Women's Tennis Committee, which allows teams that are not members of the Association of NCAA Women's Tennis Coaches (ANWC) to participate in the NCAA postseason.

The waiver was denied by the NCAA Board of Directors, which upheld the decision of the Women's Tennis Committee.

"The NCAA's decision is based on the fact that OSU is a member of the ANWC," Meryll wrote. "The ANWC does not have the authority to grant waivers to teams that are not members of the association."

The decision affects the OSU women's tennis team, which is not a member of the ANWC. The team had hoped to participate in the NCAA postseason, but will now be unable to do so.

"We are disappointed in the NCAA's decision, but we respect the authority of the governing body," Holder said in a statement.
