A Helping Hand

Billy May Get More Libyan Money

WASHINGTON (UPI) - Billy Carter asked Libya for $557,865,000 and probably will get all of it because Tripoli officials appreciate the "southern hospitality" he offered them, one of Carter's associates insisted yesterday. He said the president was not "wasting a lot of time" investigating Billy's dealings with Libya that had been previously protested by various foreign governments.

Billy Carter filed as a foreign agent for Libya on Aug. 14 and acknowledged receiving $225,890 from the radical Arab nation.

But Coleman, also traveled to Libya with Billy, said the president's brother had hoped for more. "Billy asked for $100,000,000, "Carter said. The president for the special Senate Judiciary subcommittee conducting the probe, said Coleman if he expected his friend to get the rest of the $100,000,000, it was well worth it.

"Yes," Coleman replied.

President Carter told a news conference early this month that he did not know his brother had taken money from the Libyans until it became public knowledge - and he hoped he would not be getting anymore.

Coleman said Carter approved first appearance of Libyan money.

Coleman said the payments first appeared to him when he learned that Billy had received $225,890 in December 1979 and $285,000 in April 1980.

"It was an established relationship," he said. "The president had been there before, but he had not made any formal relationship with Libya."

Even after the agreement was reached, Carter said that he had to make a decision. That he had decided to accept the money was confirmed by a source within the Carter administration.

He also said that he did not know the source of the Libyan money until after the agreement had been reached. Carter Unpopular; Why Not An Iranian Invasion?

WASHINGTON - President Carter's national popularity rating has hit an all-time low. In a recent survey, the presidential approval rating among voters was just 35 percent. This is the lowest rating ever recorded for a sitting president in U.S. history.

The survey, conducted by the Gallup Organization, found that Carter's popularity has plummeted over the past six months. His approval rating was 60 percent in January, but has declined steadily since then. The latest poll, taken last week, showed that only 25 percent of respondents believe that Carter is doing a good job as president.

The reasons for Carter's decline in popularity are varied. Many voters blame his handling of the Iran hostage crisis, which has dragged on for nearly three years. Others cite his lack of progress in the peace process in the Middle East, his economic policies, and his inability to keep the country out of foreign entanglements.

Carter's approval rating has also been hurt by the deepening recession. The unemployment rate has risen to 7.5 percent, and the stock market has suffered a sharp decline. Carter's handling of these economic issues has been criticized by both the left and the right.

Despite his low popularity, Carter insists that he will not resign. "I will not be deterred by the polls," he said in a televised speech last night. "I will continue to work tirelessly for the interests of the American people."

Like 'Fat Rat' Going After Tasty Morsel,
Overstreet Sees Big Year Behind Fine Line

SPORTS
MIDWEST - AUGUST 30, 1980 33

David Overstreet

Overstreet isn't the bragging kind, but he's ready to show what he can do to help the Arkansas basketball team in its efforts to match the success of last season when the Razorbacks reached the NCAA tourney finals.

Overstreet grew up in Cincinnati, Ohio, where he played football in school and college.

He's a 6-5, 260-pound forward who was a star at Arkansas State University in Jonesboro.

Overstreet says he'll be ready to play in the backcourt.

In Arkansas' loss to Iowa State last season, the Hogs were no match for the Cyclones' frontcourt.

Overstreet, who finished with 14 points in the game against Iowa State, says he's ready to help his team.

He says he knows he'll have to work hard to be a part of the Hogs' lineup.

In January, Overstreet was named one of the top players in the NCAA tourney.

He says he's looking forward to another season with the Razorbacks.
