State Department Officials Leaked Secret

WASHINGTON - The officials at the State Department who leaked the secret information to the President about the arms deal with the Soviets have been identified. The officials are Assistant Secretary of State John Poindexter and Deputy Undersecretary of State Richard Lingenfelter. They have been suspended without pay and are facing possible criminal charges.

The leak, which was first reported by The New York Times, has caused a major rupture in relations between the United States and the Soviet Union. The Arms Control and Disarmament Agency has said that the leak could have serious consequences for ongoing negotiations.

The information leaked included details of a secret arms deal between the United States and the Soviet Union. The deal, which was not revealed to the public, involved the transfer of advanced military technology in exchange for a reduction in nuclear weapons.

The leak has raised questions about the security of government information and the potential for leaks in the future.

We have a strong and competent leadership, and the country is moving in the right direction." He goes on to discuss various positive developments, including economic growth, job creation, and increased foreign investment.

Kinsley concludes, "In short, there are many reasons to be optimistic about the future of this country." He encourages readers to focus on the positive and remain hopeful for the future.
Country, Western Music Is Far From Dead

By Dick Winger

Music is a steady part of the American landscape, and radio is our main medium for listening to it. But we are discovering that not all Western music is alike. Some is written and produced by traditional cowboys, while others are written and produced by people who have never even been west of Chicago. The former type is more popular, but the latter type is gaining in popularity.

Both types of Western music have a lot to offer. The traditional cowboys produce music that is true to the American frontier. They use instruments such as the fiddle, guitar, and banjo, and their songs often talk about life in the West. The new cowboys, on the other hand, produce music that is more modern and experimental. They use synthesizers and other electronic instruments, and their songs often talk about life in the modern world.

As a result, Western music is becoming more popular than ever. It is starting to be heard in places where it was once unheard of. For example, Western music is now being played in shopping malls and restaurants. It is also beginning to be heard in schools and universities, where it is being used as a way to teach about the American frontier.

Western music is not just for cowboys anymore. It is for everyone who enjoys the American frontier. Whether you are a traditional cowboy or a new cowboy, you can find Western music to suit your taste.

Reagan Says Tax Cut Plan ‘On The Mark’

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Reagan said Friday that tax cut proposals he was considering were "on the mark." Reagan was responding to a letter from a member of Congress who said the president's proposals were "too small" and "insufficient to stimulate the economy.

"I don't think we can be satisfied with a tax cut that is too small," Reagan said. "A tax cut that is too small will not stimulate the economy. It won't do anything to reduce the deficit. It won't do anything to create jobs."

Reagan's proposals would reduce the maximum tax rate for high income taxpayers from 70% to 50% and eliminate the federal income tax for people who earn less than $35,000.
