POLOMIE PREMIER AXED

WARSAW, Poland (UPI) — The Central Committee of the PoLska Komunistyczna and the Popular Committees of Warsaw overwhelmingly endorsed Premier Edward Bardo on Tuesday. Bardo was the unanimous choice at the conference which drew national attention two decades ago as an unprecedented information exchange between Poland's Communists.

The conference, which ended Monday night, was the first such gathering since 1945, when the country was under German occupation. It was described as a milestone in Poland's political evolution.

The Central Committee, meeting for the first time since December 1973, passed a resolution supporting the new government led by Bardo. The resolution was expected to be endorsed by the Communist Party's congress, which is scheduled for later this year.

The decision was hailed as a victory for the left-wing factions within the party, who have been pushing for a more moderate approach to domestic and foreign policy. It was seen as a rejection of the hard-line policies of the previous government, which had been deeply criticized for its handling of the economy and its foreign relations.

Bardo, who took office last month, is expected to implement a number of liberal reforms, including the privatization of state-owned industries and the introduction of market-oriented economic policies. He is also expected to seek closer ties with Western Europe and the United States.

The Central Committee's endorsement was seen as a major boost for Bardo, who has been under pressure from within the party to adopt a more conciliatory stance.

The decision was also welcomed by many of Poland's Western allies, who had been concerned about the country's drift to the right under the previous government. It was seen as a positive sign that Poland was moving away from isolation and toward a more integrated role in the European community.

Doonesbury

I was really disappointed that the new owner of the comic strip decided to change the name to something like 'Doonesbury in Action'. It just doesn't feel the same without the original title.

Bugs Bunny

What do you have, Looney Tunes? Oh, just a bunch of evil plots to steal a picnic. I don't blame you, it's the only way to survive.

Berry's World

Hi, friends! I wanted to talk about the new game I'm working on. It's called 'Berry's Adventures in the Forest' and it's going to be a big hit. I promise.

Side Glances

I saw a funny sight today. A squirrel was trying to cross the street, but a cat was chasing it around. I wonder if they're planning to have a race or something.

Agoraphobics Winning Their Battle

By BRUCE WATTS, STAFF WRITER

The agoraphobic has been described as the person who is afraid of being in public places. But what if you were afraid of being in public places? That's the question facing people with agoraphobia, a fear of open spaces, or public places. It's a condition that can be paralyzing, literally preventing people from leaving their homes. Yet, with the right treatment and support, it's possible to overcome this fear. The key is to face your fears gradually, building up to more challenging situations.

3 people are running for the position of sheriff in the next election. Each candidate has a unique perspective on law enforcement and how to best serve the community. With the safety of the community at stake, it's crucial for voters to research and understand the platforms of these candidates before casting their votes. The sheriff's role is critical in maintaining public safety and ensuring justice is served.

Unusual Secret Procedure Proposed

LA: Beer Instead Of Water

Los Angeles is considering an innovative solution to their water crisis: beer! Yes, you read that right. The city council is deliberating on a proposal to use beer instead of water for certain uses, such as irrigation and cleaning. While unconventional, this approach could provide a short-term solution to the city's water shortage. However, it remains to be seen whether the public will accept this radical idea.

Scientists Learned From Shark

Scientists have made a groundbreaking discovery by studying sharks. They found that sharks use a unique system to detect objects in their environment, which could have significant implications for technology and engineering. This discovery opens up new possibilities for developing technologies that mimic shark's abilities.

Amendment

Scientists have discovered that sharks use the sense of electroreception to detect objects in their environment. The electroreception system, which involves a network of sensory receptors, allows sharks to perceive objects that are not visible to the naked eye. This finding could have applications in various fields, from robotics to medicine.
