Hints From Heloise

Making A Batch Of ‘Cheap’ Clay

DEAR HELLOISE: Here’s a neat idea for sumptuous clay paintings that you can par-take from a potter’s shipment, or use to make your own on a budget. Use a good amount of water and a little salt to mix the clay into a dough that doesn’t have to be in the back and forth until it’s smooth. You can also add a pinch of baking soda to the mixture to make it stickier. The clay is perfect for a wide variety of crafts and projects, and it’s easy to work with and mold to your liking. It’s a great way to add a personal touch to your home decorations or gifts for friends. Have fun creating with clay! - Mrs. P. A. Ball, New York, N.Y.

DEAR HELLOISE: How is the bad light hanging around you? It’s been reported that some artistic friends have been working to improve it. Some have even been seen experimenting with new techniques and materials to make the lighting more appealing. Have you been enjoying any of these creative solutions? - Mr. J. D. Smith, Kansas City, Mo.

Careless Attitudes Kill

Dear Editor:
I write to voice my concern about the increasing number of accidents in our community. These incidents are not just random events; they are a result of careless behavior and a lack of basic safety precautions. I urge our citizens to take responsibility and be mindful of their actions to prevent further tragedies.

Sincerely,

Business Cards Have Pecking Order

Art Buchwald

In this age of hyper-connectivity, the humble business card has taken on a new significance. It's no longer just a piece of paper with contact information; it's a tool for navigating the social pecking order. The way you present your card can determine who gets ahead and who falls behind. Whether you're doing business with a towering tycoon or a towering tycoon's towering tycoon, having the right card at the right time can make all the difference.

SOUTHERNERS DEFY SOUTHERN STRATEGY

Harriet Van Horne

In the South, where the sun sets in the west and the winds blow from the east, there is a tradition of standing up for what you believe in. This is especially true when it comes to birth control. Despite the efforts of some to enforce outdated mandates and moral crusades against the practice, our people have held firm. We are not deterred by the threats and the warnings. It is our right to control our own bodies and our own destinies.

Women In Fight Over Conflict-Of-Rights Issue

Dr. Jeanne Faulk

The conflict of rights issue has been simmering for a long time, but it has reached a boiling point. On one side, there are those who believe in personal autonomy and the right to make one's own choices. On the other side, there are those who advocate for collective good and the protection of society. As we navigate this complex landscape, we must remember that compromise and dialogue are key to finding a solution that respects everyone's rights.

Why Hasn't Stewart Quashed Campaign Furor?

WASHINGTON—Three months ago, I reported that Stewart had launched a massive campaign of his own to quash the furor over his personal life. But as the weeks have passed, it seems that his efforts have been in vain. The controversy refuses to die down, and the public appears to have lost interest in the story altogether. It's hard to believe that a man with so much potential could have allowed himself to be embroiled in such a scandal.

Environmental Report Card: The '60s

WASHINGTON—The '60s were a time of change and progress, but they were also a time of neglect. Despite the best intentions, we failed to protect our environment. The report card for the '60s is a stark reminder of what we've lost. Let us not allow the same mistakes to be made in the future.

How Far Will They Go?

By Beverly L. Acuff

Why did we do it? The word spread out like wildfire. "We heard it was true. The mayor was going to have us evicted!" The scenario played itself out time and time again. The city officials informed the residents that they would have to leave their homes in order to make way for a new development project. The people were shocked and angry.

The news hit the streets like a whirlwind. "No way!" was the common refrain. "We've lived here for years, why are they trying to kick us out?" The residents formed a committee and began to organize. They knew they had to take action.

The mayor was taken aback by the public outcry. He had hoped to implement the project without too much resistance. But the residents were determined to fight for their homes.

The committee began to rally support from other residents, as well as from local politicians and community leaders. They held meetings and rallied in front of city hall, demanding that their voices be heard.

The mayor was ultimately forced to back down. The project was put on hold, and the residents were able to keep their homes.

The story of the residents fighting for their homes is just one example of the many ways in which people can stand up for what they believe in. Whether it's in the face of a power struggle or a larger social issue, the determination and solidarity of the people is what ultimately wins out.

Religion Lawsuit Nixed

President Carter, regarding efforts to ban a teens-age boy's praying in school, has ordered his staff to study the implications of the Supreme Court's decision in June to uphold the ban.

Carter announced plans to issue a proclamation on the matter, saying he would base his decision on the advice of legal experts.

The decision in June was based on the Supreme Court's interpretation of the 1969 law, which banned praying in public schools.

Carter said he would review the case carefully and that he would consult with religious leaders and experts on the matter.

Carter's decision comes after a series of legal challenges to the law, which was enacted to prevent religious activities in public schools.

The case was brought by the American Civil Liberties Union, which argued that the law violated the free exercise clause of the First Amendment.

The court upheld the law, ruling that it did not violate the Constitution.

Carter's decision is expected to be announced in the coming days.

DALLAS - A woman described as being a suspect in a murder case has been identified as a former employee of the victim, according to law enforcement sources.

The woman, who has not been named, is believed to have been at the scene of the crime.

Investigators are said to be searching for evidence linking the woman to the murder.

The murder occurred on September 12th, and police are still searching for the suspect.

Standing Firm

The defendant in the case, who is currently in jail, is said to be standing firm and refusing to cooperate with law enforcement.

The defendant, who has a long criminal record, is said to be refusing to answer questions about the murder.

Law enforcement sources are said to be working to gather more evidence to link the defendant to the crime.

Stephen King, the Omicron, Maine, author of the best-seller "The Shining," was quoted by a reporter as saying, "I was always a reader, but I wanted to be a writer." He has now written novels that have been described as "Horror Classics." His latest release, "The Shining," has been hailed as a 'classic' by critics. Despite being well-known for his horror novels, King has also been praised for his ability to write about the human condition.

It's been 14 years, but Jan and Dean are back

By Carl Dible

BRIGHT-RIDDER

It's 14 years since Jan and Dean last appeared on the West Coast. Their careers began in Los Angeles in 1961 with 'Little Deuce Coupe,' and for a brief time they were the nation's most popular recording act. Their story begins in the mid-Fifties when Jan and Dean were still in high school. Dean transferred to L.A. High where he joined the school's football team and was also active in the drama club. His best friend was Jan, who was already a talented vocalist. They wrote their first song together, 'Monday,' and it was well-received by the school's music director.

Eventually they started writing songs and recording them in various venues across Southern California. They were a hit among the high school crowd, and soon their music began to attract a wider audience. Their first big break came when they were asked to perform at a school dance. Their performance was so well-received that they were invited to perform at various local events.

In 1961, they signed with Capitol Records, and their first single, 'Little Deuce Coupe,' became an instant hit. They went on to release several more successful albums and singles, becoming one of the most popular acts in the country. Their music was a blend of surf and rock, and they were often compared to the Beach Boys.

Their careers were cut short when Dean was convicted of murder in 1968. He served a short sentence and was later released. Jan continued to record and perform, but the two friends had a falling out. They didn't speak for many years, but in recent years they have begun to reconcile.

Now, 14 years after their last appearance, Jan and Dean are back with a new album. They have been working on new material, and they are excited to be back on the road. They plan to perform at various venues across the country, including some of their old haunts.

Dancers take to ice

These two former dance champions are the stars of the latest Oklahoman. The ice skaters, Lorna Wright and John Capossela, will be the main attraction in the Oklahoman's newest production, "Oklahoma!"

The show will be performed at the Civic Center Music Hall in Oklahoma City, July 27-Aug. 2. The production will feature a cast of more than 100, including dancers, singers, and musicians.

Jan and Dean are back

But of course, it is Jan and Dean who draw the crowds. Their music is still popular, and they are often cited as one of the pioneers of the surfing music genre.

Jan apparently still enjoys the music, and he's looking forward to performing at the anniversary show. "It's a great feeling," he says. "It's nice to be back on the stage with Dean."

Dean, on the other hand, is more reserved. "It's been a long time," he says. "But I'm glad to be back."

The show will be held at the Civic Center Music Hall in Oklahoma City, July 27-Aug. 2.

Dance company adds duo

Prairie Dance Theatre, a modern dance company based in Oklahoma City, has added two new members to its roster. The two new dancers, Joanne Smith and John Capossela, will be joining the company for its upcoming production, "Oklahoma!"

Joanne Smith is a graduate of the University of Oklahoma and has performed with several prominent dance companies around the country. She has won numerous awards for her work, and her presence will be a valuable addition to the company's lineup.

John Capossela is a former Olympic ice dancer and has won several national and international championships. He is known for his precise and athletic style, and his inclusion in the company will add a new dimension to the production.

In addition to the new dancers, the company will be joined by several other artists, including musicians, designers, and technicians. The production will be held at the Civic Center Music Hall in Oklahoma City, July 27-Aug. 2.

Strange combination gives Yes new vitality

'The energy is still there but we have lost the discipline which is necessary for the sound to be clear,' states Chris Squire, 'and we've been learning to أن نكون أكثر خطوة ودقة في تقديم الأداء.'

The band's next tour will be their first in seven years and their first ever in Japan. They will return to the UK in the spring to record their next album.

'潭州'40

A lot of Yes fans have been waiting a long time to hear what the band has been working on. The new album, 'Tales of Creation,' has been described as a return to the band's roots, with a focus on the band's early years in the '70s.

'Tales of Creation' is the band's first album in five years and the first to feature new material. The album features the band's signature progressive rock sound, with influences from their early albums.

The album's lead single, '梦境,' has been well-received by fans and critics alike. The song's catchy melody and sophisticated musicianship have earned it a spot on many end-of-year lists.

'Tales of Creation' is available now and is receiving critical acclaim. The band's fans are eagerly waiting to hear more from this exciting new chapter in their career.
